1. Purpose, Scope and Policy Administration

This manual sets out the organisation's core people policies and day-to-day workplace procedures. It is intended to promote consistent decisions, responsible use of company resources, clear employee expectations, and a safe and professional working environment.

These policies apply to employees and may apply to interns, contractors, consultants, and temporary personnel where relevant to their engagement terms. Where an individual employment agreement, a collective arrangement, or applicable law provides a more specific or more protective requirement, HR must review the conflict and apply the legally appropriate requirement.

1.1 Policy ownership

• Human Resources (HR) maintains this manual, communicates approved changes, and keeps supporting records.

• Managers are responsible for applying policies consistently, documenting approvals, and raising exceptions with HR.

• Employees are responsible for reading applicable policies, completing required forms, safeguarding company information and property, and asking HR when a rule is unclear.

• Management approves new policies and material changes. HR should review the manual at least annually.

1.2 Exceptions and interpretation

Exceptions must be documented and approved by the authorised manager and HR. No manager may waive a statutory requirement. If a policy appears inconsistent with law or an employment contract, HR should seek appropriate professional advice before taking action.

2. Vision, Mission and Organisation Structure

2.1 Vision and mission

The organisation aims to deliver reliable services, create value for customers, support employee growth, and maintain an ethical, inclusive, and sustainable workplace. Its mission is to achieve business goals through quality work, collaboration, continuous improvement, responsible resource use, and respect for people.

2.2 Organisation structure

The organisation maintains an approved organisation chart showing reporting relationships, departments, roles, and decision-making authority. HR is responsible for maintaining the current chart and communicating material changes to affected employees.

• Each department should maintain current role profiles and reporting lines.

• Employees should understand their reporting manager, job responsibilities, and escalation route.

• Changes to reporting lines or organisational structure should be communicated by the relevant manager and HR.

3. Recruitment, Selection and Joining

3.1 Recruitment

• Recruitment should be based on approved workforce requirements, job-related criteria, and documented hiring approvals.

• Job descriptions should define the role's responsibilities, required skills, reporting relationship, and employment type.

• Candidates should be assessed fairly using consistent, role-relevant methods. Employment decisions should not be based on unlawful discrimination.

• References, qualifications, identity, and other background checks may be completed where appropriate, lawful, and communicated to the candidate.

• Only authorised representatives may issue an offer or commit the organisation to employment terms.

3.2 Offer and joining formalities

• HR issues the approved offer or appointment letter, including role, location, compensation, start date, reporting manager, probation terms, and notice provisions.

• Employees must provide accurate joining information and required documents before or at joining, subject to applicable law.

• HR or the responsible administrator completes the joining checklist, creates the employee record, and arranges system access and equipment.

• Employees must disclose any relevant conflict of interest and sign required confidentiality, acceptable-use, and policy acknowledgements.

3.3 Joining checklist

• Signed offer/appointment letter and joining forms.

• Identity and address verification documents as lawfully required.

• Education and role-related qualification documents.

• Previous employment documents where relevant, such as relieving letter or salary slip.

• Bank and payroll details through approved secure channels.

• Emergency contact and statutory forms where applicable.

• Policy acknowledgements, access setup, and equipment handover record.

4. Personnel Records and Documentation

HR maintains an individual personnel file for each employee. Personnel records are confidential and must be accessed only by authorised personnel for legitimate employment or legal purposes.

4.1 Typical personnel records

• Educational qualification documents and professional certificates.

• Joining form, offer/appointment letter, and employment amendments.

• Identity and address verification records where lawfully required.

• Previous-employment documents where applicable.

• Payroll, attendance, leave, performance, training, and disciplinary records as appropriate.

• Equipment issue/return acknowledgements and signed policy acknowledgements.

4.2 Record handling

• Collect only information reasonably required for employment administration or legal compliance.

• Store records in approved secure systems or locked cabinets; do not leave confidential files unattended.

• Do not share employee information except with authorised recipients or where disclosure is legally required.

• Retain and securely dispose of records according to the approved retention schedule and applicable law.

• Employees should notify HR if their contact, bank, emergency contact, or other relevant information changes.

5. Job Descriptions and Employee Responsibilities

• HR coordinates the day-to-day administration of HR processes.

• Each department maintains a current job description and role profile for its positions.

• Employees should understand their duties, expected outcomes, reporting line, and applicable performance standards.

• Managers should explain priorities, provide reasonable feedback, and review role descriptions when responsibilities materially change.

6. Probation and Confirmation

• The standard probation period is three months from the date of joining, unless the appointment letter states otherwise.

• Where permitted by the appointment terms and applicable law, probation may be extended in writing with reasons and a revised review date.

• Managers should review performance, conduct, attendance, role fit, and training needs during probation.

• HR communicates confirmation, extension, or separation in writing. Any extension or separation must follow the employment terms and applicable law.

7. New Employee Orientation

HR or the designated manager arranges orientation for new employees. Orientation should cover:

• Organisation vision, mission, structure, and key contacts.

• Job responsibilities, reporting relationships, work hours, attendance, and leave procedures.

• Employment conditions, code of conduct, workplace expectations, and escalation channels.

• Information security, confidentiality, acceptable technology use, and data protection.

• Health, safety, emergency procedures, facilities, and equipment issued.

• Required training, systems access, and policy acknowledgements.

8. Working Days, Office Hours and Attendance

8.1 Working schedule

The standard schedule described for this organisation is a six-day working week from Monday to Saturday, with every second Saturday off and Sunday as the weekly non-working day. Department-specific schedules, shifts, remote-work arrangements, and exceptions must be communicated by the authorised manager and HR.

8.2 Office hours and breaks

The historical schedule used by the organisation lists office hours of 10:00 a.m. to 7:00 p.m. for one staff group and 10:00 a.m. to 6:30 p.m. for another, with a half-hour lunch break from 1:30 p.m. to 2:00 p.m. For a production policy, HR must publish one approved, role-based schedule that complies with applicable law and is applied consistently.

8.3 Attendance recording

• Employees must record attendance using the designated system and follow any team-specific check-in requirements.

• Field and sales employees must update their work location and daily start/end times in the approved application when required.

• Employees should inform their reporting manager promptly if delayed or unable to attend.

• Attendance corrections must be submitted promptly with an explanation and manager approval.

8.4 Late arrival and half-day requests

• Employees should arrive ready to work at the start of their scheduled shift. Any grace period must be stated in the current attendance rules.

• Repeated lateness may be discussed with the employee and managed under the disciplinary process, subject to applicable law and policy.

• Half-day leave or a change in working hours requires advance approval from the reporting manager, except in emergencies.

• Managers should record approved attendance exceptions accurately and refer unclear cases to HR.

The exact grace period, half-day timing, and consequences for repeated late arrival must be specified in the company's approved attendance schedule.

9. Leave and Holidays

9.1 Leave entitlement and approval

• The existing policy describes one paid casual leave day per month after successful completion of probation and states an entitlement of 12 days of paid leave, in addition to public holidays.

• HR must publish the definitive leave schedule, including applicable casual, sick, earned/privilege, maternity/paternity or other statutory leave, and any company-specific leave categories.

• For planned one-day leave, employees should submit the application at least one day in advance and obtain approval from their reporting manager.

• Longer planned leave should be requested as early as practicable so that team coverage can be arranged.

• Leave is not approved until confirmed through the designated process, except where emergency or statutory provisions apply.

9.2 Public holidays

• HR publishes the annual holiday calendar at the start of the financial or calendar year, as applicable.

• The calendar should reflect applicable central, state, and local requirements and any company-approved holidays.

• Employees should check the published calendar and consult HR regarding shift or field-work arrangements.

9.3 Leave records

HR maintains leave balances and approvals. Carry-forward, encashment, documentation, and treatment on separation must be defined in the approved leave schedule and applied according to applicable law.

10. Absence and Attendance Exceptions

• Employees who cannot attend work should notify their manager as early as possible and state the expected duration when known.

• Managers should record the absence and refer unexplained or repeated absence to HR.

• An employee absent for two consecutive working days without notice may be contacted and asked to explain the absence in writing.

• If an absence continues for an extended period without communication, HR should make reasonable attempts to contact the employee and follow a documented process before any employment decision.

• Unauthorised absence may lead to corrective or disciplinary action after review of the circumstances and any explanation provided.

Employment should not be treated as automatically terminated solely because an employee has been absent for a stated number of days; HR must follow the contract, fair process, and applicable law.

11. Staff Movement, Assignment and Transfer

• Based on project or business needs, an employee may be assigned temporarily or permanently to another location or project, subject to employment terms and applicable law.

• Managers should communicate the reason, duration, reporting line, duties, and any approved travel or relocation arrangements.

• A material change in role, location, compensation, or employment terms must be documented by HR and accepted or processed as legally required.

• A transfer that changes the employee's job mandate may require an updated role description or written amendment to the employment terms.

12. Office Facilities and Workplace Housekeeping

• Employees should keep desks and shared spaces orderly and store files, papers, books, registers, and other materials in designated places.

• Confidential papers and registers should be secured when not in use.

• Turn off lights, fans, and other non-essential equipment when leaving, where safe and appropriate.

• Office telephones, SIM cards, and other communication resources are for official use, except for reasonable emergency use.

• Employees must promptly report damaged facilities, unsafe conditions, or lost office keys/access cards.

13. Interim Assignments, Promotion and Role Changes

• An employee may be assigned temporary higher-level duties to meet business needs. A temporary assignment does not automatically change pay unless the written assignment or applicable policy provides otherwise.

• Management may review the assignment after a reasonable period and confirm the role, extend the assignment, or return the employee to prior duties.

• A promotion may include a defined review or trial period, communicated in writing.

• Successful completion should be documented with the revised designation, responsibilities, effective date, and compensation where applicable.

• If the trial period is not successful, HR and the manager should discuss the outcome with the employee and document a suitable decision consistent with the employment terms.

14. Resignation, Separation and Termination

14.1 Voluntary resignation

• Employees should submit a written resignation to the designated manager or Executive Director, stating the proposed last working day.

• The notice period must be the period specified in the appointment letter or applicable policy. The source policy contains both one-month and three-month references; HR must resolve this inconsistency in the approved notice schedule.

• HR acknowledges the resignation, confirms the notice period, and coordinates handover, leave balance review, access removal, and final settlement.

• Any waiver or reduction of notice must be approved in writing by the authorised management representative and handled according to applicable law.

14.2 Redundancy and business restructuring

Where a role is removed due to business needs, HR and management must document the rationale, consult affected employees where required, provide applicable notice and payments, and follow the law and employment terms.

14.3 Termination for misconduct or performance

Potential grounds for disciplinary action may include:

• Continuing poor performance or gross negligence of duty.

• Embezzlement, fraud, or misuse of company funds.

• Intoxication while conducting official business or on company premises, subject to applicable law and safety procedures.

• Misuse, damage, or unauthorised removal of company equipment or property.

• Repeated unauthorised absence or leave abuse.

• Unauthorised disclosure of confidential company or employee information.

Before a termination decision, HR should review the facts, provide a fair opportunity to respond, document findings, and ensure the decision is consistent with the employment terms and applicable law.

15. Payroll, Salary and Deductions

• HR prepares or validates payroll inputs, including salary, allowances, attendance, approved leave, and authorised deductions.

• The Finance/Accounts function checks payroll calculations and the designated approver authorises payroll before payment.

• Payslips should show the relevant salary components, allowances, deductions, and net pay.

• Payroll and bank details must be handled securely and shared only with authorised personnel.

• Employees should raise payroll discrepancies with HR or Finance promptly, providing the relevant pay period and details.

15.1 Payroll approval

Payroll should be reviewed by HR and Finance and approved by the authorised Director or designated approver before disbursement. Changes to salary or bank details should be documented and independently verified.

16. Business Travel and Travelling Allowance

• Employees travelling for approved company business may claim eligible travel expenses under the current travel policy.

• Employees should obtain required travel approval before incurring material expenses.

• Claims should be submitted using the designated form by the monthly cut-off, which HR/Finance should communicate in advance.

• Attach original or valid digital receipts for eligible expenses, such as fuel and meals, where required.

• Claims should include date, business purpose, client/project, origin and destination, distance travelled, expense type, and amount.

• Finance may return incomplete or unsupported claims for correction. False or duplicate claims may be referred for disciplinary review.

17. Tax and Statutory Payroll Compliance

The company makes tax and statutory payroll deductions where legally required and remits amounts to the relevant authorities within applicable timelines. HR and Finance are responsible for maintaining required registrations, records, returns, and employee communications.

17.1 Professional tax

The earlier company policy included the following Gujarat professional-tax table. The figures below are retained as a reference from the existing policy and must be verified against current official requirements before payroll use.

Monthly income	Amount shown in existing policy
Up to ■5,999	Nil
■6,000–■8,999	■80
■9,000–■11,999	■150
■12,000 and above	■200

Finance must verify current rates, thresholds, exemptions, and filing requirements with official sources or a qualified payroll adviser before applying deductions.

18. Employee Engagement and Development

HR coordinates employee welfare, engagement, and development activities to support collaboration, morale, and retention.

• Maintain an employee birthday calendar where employees have been informed and the information is used appropriately.

• Recognise employee contributions, including an Employee of the Month programme where used.

• Organise team games, festival and special-day celebrations, monthly birthday activities, and occasional team outings or picnics.

• Training and development activities should be based on role requirements, business needs, and employee development goals.

19. Mobile Phone and Personal Device Use

• Personal phone use should not interfere with work, safety, service quality, or meetings.

• Where the company requires phones to be stored during work, HR must communicate the arrangement, storage method, access during breaks, and emergency exceptions.

• Employees may use a phone containing both personal and company SIMs only in accordance with IT/security instructions.

• Personal social-media browsing and entertainment should not disrupt work or expose company information.

• Phones should be silent or on vibrate during meetings and in work areas where required.

• Official devices, SIM cards, and company communication accounts must be used in line with the acceptable-use policy.

• Employees should safeguard personal phones brought to the workplace; report any security incident involving company data promptly.

20. Dress Code and Professional Conduct

Employees should maintain a clean, neat, safe, and professional appearance appropriate to their role, workplace, client interactions, and any health and safety requirements.

20.1 Formal and business-casual clothing

• Formal clothing may include shirts, trousers, business suits, Indian formal wear, saris, or other professional attire.

• Where the department permits casual attire, options may include polo shirts, T-shirts, dresses, or other neat clothing on designated days.

• Clothing should be suitable for the work performed and should not contain offensive or discriminatory images or messages.

• Footwear must be safe for the workplace and any role-specific requirements.

20.2 Not appropriate

• Clothing that creates a safety risk or prevents required protective equipment from being used.

• Clothing that is excessively revealing for the workplace, contains offensive content, or is unsuitable for professional duties.

• Athletic or leisure clothing in roles or situations where the manager has specified formal or client-facing attire.

Dress requirements should be applied consistently and fairly, with reasonable accommodations considered where required.

21. Employee Suggestions and Continuous Improvement

• Employees are encouraged to suggest ideas that improve safety, service quality, operational efficiency, employee experience, cost control, and company growth.

• Suggestions may be submitted to the manager or HR through the designated channel.

• The receiving manager should acknowledge suggestions and route them to the appropriate decision-maker.

• Where practical, the company may recognise suggestions that deliver measurable improvements.

22. Employee Feedback and Grievance Handling

• Employees may raise work-related feedback, concerns, or grievances with their manager or HR.

• Concerns should be handled respectfully, confidentially to the extent practicable, and without retaliation for good-faith reporting.

• HR should acknowledge receipt, assess urgency, identify the appropriate reviewer, and keep a record of actions taken.

• Where the concern involves the employee's manager, the employee may contact HR or the designated senior manager directly.

• The company should communicate an outcome or next steps within a reasonable period, subject to the nature and complexity of the matter.

23. Company Laptop and IT Equipment

23.1 Purpose and scope

This policy applies to company-owned laptops and related equipment issued for work, including chargers, docks, monitors, keyboards, mice, headsets, mobile hotspots, and accessories.

23.2 Issue and acknowledgement

• Equipment is issued based on job requirements and authorised approval.

• IT/Administration records the device make/model, serial number or asset tag, issue date, accessories, condition, and employee acknowledgement.

• Employees should inspect the equipment at handover and promptly report pre-existing damage or missing accessories.

• All issued equipment remains company property unless a written transfer or sale is authorised.

23.3 Acceptable use

• Use equipment for authorised business activities and comply with company IT and security rules.

• Limited personal use is permitted only if approved by company policy and does not create security, legal, or productivity risks.

• Do not use company equipment for unlawful activity, harassment, unauthorised commercial activity, or prohibited content.

23.4 Security and data protection

• Use a strong password and multi-factor authentication where available. Never share passwords or authentication codes.

• Lock the screen when unattended and secure the device while travelling.

• Store business files in company-approved storage and backup locations.

• Do not install unapproved software, disable security tools, bypass access controls, or connect unknown USB devices.

• Keep operating systems, applications, endpoint protection, and security updates current as directed by IT.

• Do not transfer confidential company or employee data to personal email, personal cloud storage, or unauthorised removable media.

• Report phishing, malware, suspected data exposure, or unauthorised access to IT immediately.

23.5 Care, transport and remote work

• Keep the laptop dry, ventilated, and away from liquids, excessive heat, and physical impact.

• Use a protective bag and do not leave the laptop visible in an unattended vehicle.

• Use secure networks for remote work and follow IT instructions for VPN or other approved protection.

• Do not allow unauthorised people to use the device or view confidential information.

• Remote work is subject to the same confidentiality and security requirements as office work.

23.6 Repairs, damage and technical support

• Contact IT/helpdesk for faults, battery issues, screen damage, charger problems, or other technical issues.

• Do not open the laptop, attempt unauthorised repairs, or use unapproved service providers.

• Obtain approval before repairs, upgrades, replacement parts, or warranty claims.

• Report accidental damage, loss, or theft as soon as possible and provide details for the incident record.

• Any employee liability or cost recovery must be assessed case by case under the employment terms, company procedure, and applicable law; no automatic salary deduction should be assumed.

23.7 Loss or theft

• Notify the manager and IT/security team immediately if equipment is lost or stolen.

• Provide the asset tag/serial number, last known location, time, and relevant circumstances where known.

• The company may remotely lock, locate, or wipe the device where technically available and legally permitted.

• Employees must cooperate with reasonable security and incident-investigation steps.

23.8 Software, internet and monitoring

• Only licensed and company-approved software may be installed.

• Do not copy company software or data to unauthorised devices or accounts.

• Company systems may be logged or monitored for legitimate security, compliance, and operational purposes in accordance with applicable law and the company privacy notice.

• Access to employee data and system logs must be limited to authorised personnel and legitimate purposes.

23.9 Return of equipment

• Return the laptop, charger, and accessories when requested, when transferring to a role that no longer requires them, or during exit clearance.

• Return equipment in reasonable condition, allowing for normal wear and tear.

• IT should verify the asset record, transfer approved business data, revoke access, and securely erase company data where appropriate.

• Employees must not retain company data or unauthorised copies after return.

23.10 Responsibilities

• Employees must protect equipment, follow security instructions, report incidents, and return property by the required deadline.

• IT/Administration maintains the asset register, configures security controls, provides support channels, and records handover and return.

• Managers approve issue requests and ensure equipment is returned when no longer required.

23.11 Laptop handover checklist

• Employee name, department, manager, and issue date.

• Laptop make/model, serial number, and asset tag.

• Charger and accessories issued.

• Device condition and pre-existing damage.

• Security setup completed and employee briefed.

• Employee acknowledgement and IT/Administration sign-off.

24. Information Security and Confidentiality

• Employees must protect confidential business, client, financial, employee, and technical information.

• Share information only with authorised people and for legitimate business purposes.

• Use approved storage, messaging, file-sharing, and collaboration tools.

• Do not disclose passwords, access tokens, client data, or internal documents to unauthorised people or public AI tools.

• Report suspected loss, disclosure, or misuse of information immediately to IT/security and the manager.

• Confidentiality obligations continue after employment ends, subject to applicable law.

25. Workplace Respect, Equal Opportunity and Anti-Harassment

• The company expects professional, respectful conduct and prohibits harassment, bullying, intimidation, and unlawful discrimination.

• Employment decisions should be based on role-related criteria and applicable law.

• Employees may report concerns to HR, the designated committee, or another authorised channel without retaliation for good-faith reporting.

• Complaints must be handled promptly, impartially, and confidentially to the extent practicable.

• Where applicable, the organisation must maintain the legally required process and committee for prevention of sexual harassment at the workplace (POSH), including required awareness and complaint procedures.

26. Health, Safety and Emergency Procedures

• Employees must follow safety instructions, use required protective equipment, and report hazards, injuries, and near misses promptly.

• Keep exits, corridors, electrical panels, and fire equipment unobstructed.

• Do not use damaged electrical equipment; report it to Administration or IT.

• Know the location of emergency exits, first-aid supplies, and emergency contacts.

• During an emergency, follow instructions from authorised responders and do not take unnecessary risks.

27. Disciplinary Process

Where misconduct, repeated policy violations, or performance concerns arise, the company should use a fair, proportionate, and documented process.

• Clarify the concern and gather relevant facts.

• Inform the employee of the concern and provide a reasonable opportunity to respond.

• Consider the explanation, evidence, prior guidance, severity, and relevant circumstances.

• Document the decision and any corrective action, which may include coaching, a written warning, a final warning, or further action consistent with law and employment terms.

• Provide an escalation or review route where appropriate.

Serious misconduct may require immediate protective action, but any final employment decision must follow applicable legal requirements.

28. Exit Clearance and Return of Company Property

• HR confirms the last working day, notice arrangements, handover requirements, and final settlement process.

• The employee returns laptop, charger, accessories, access cards, keys, SIM cards, documents, and other company property.

• IT disables access at the appropriate time, preserves business records as required, and removes company data from issued devices.

• The manager confirms handover of projects, files, credentials, and outstanding work using approved secure procedures.

• Finance and HR reconcile salary, approved expenses, leave balance, and lawful deductions and communicate final settlement details.

• HR issues separation documents where applicable and retains records according to the approved retention schedule.

Appendix B. Policy Governance and Approval

Policy owner: Human Resources Department

Approver: Company management / authorised Director

Effective date: To be assigned on approval

Next review date: Within 12 months of approval, or earlier if required

Before issuing this manual, management should confirm working hours, leave entitlements, notice periods, attendance consequences, statutory deductions, grievance channels, and all jurisdiction-specific requirements. HR should replace any general wording with the company's approved operational details.

This handbook is a professional policy template. It should be customised to the organisation's actual practices and reviewed for compliance with applicable Indian employment, tax, privacy, and workplace laws before formal adoption.
